Grand Knight's Column

ROBERT WOZNAK

With all the materialism, hype, and sensationalism in the media today, it is difficult to believe that one may find something of worth in today's music. To my pleasant surprise I recently found value and some lessons while listening to the radio. No, I am not referring to one of those AM gospel radio stations. In fact, I heard this on a New York based FM radio station as a new release. While the grammar in the lyrics of this song is not perfect and the song's eloquence is in the simplicity and directness, it states the truth about the importance of practicing our beliefs rather than merely talking about them. I would like to share these lyrics with both the newer and more experienced members in the hopes that it may inspire the not-so-active brothers to become more involved with our brotherhood. I present to you the lyrics of that new hit single entitled, "You Are What You Do," by the group, "Highway 101".

*Could have been my grandpa,
 could have been my preacher.
 Could have been my high school history teacher.
 Somebody said it and I'll never forget it.
 Might have been my daddy,
 might have been my mama.
 Might have been Dolly Parton,
 or the Dolli Llama.
 They were words to the wise,
 and they hit me right between the eyes.*

*If you want to write a song,
 better get a guitar.
 If you want to win Daytona,
 better get you a car.
 If you want to be Picasso,
 better get some paint.
 For you are what you do,
 and if you don't then you ain't.*

*Could have been a stranger,
 could have been a friend.
 Could have been a commentator on CNN.*

*Talking to my TV, directly to me.
 Might have been my banker,
 might have been my bookie.
 Might have even read it in a fort ne cookie.*

*In some Chinese joint,
 but let me get to the point.*
